

Wedding Rings

The origins of wedding rings worn on the finger as a symbol of eternal love, date back to at the times of ancient Egypt. Circle which has no beginning or end is continuing to symbolize love. In Egypt, the rings were made of iron, but the children of Israel began as a symbol of the state of marriage to use gold ornaments. In later history, various types of rings passed metamorphosis in order to gain its current shape only in the mid-twentieth century, when the men began to wear wedding rings.

Traditionally, use only gold rings, one of today's fashion for the future platinum, combined with different metals, and even Titanium. A sign of our times are also wedding rings worn by people living in free trade, which in this way, they want to signify their membership of a partner. Most, however, they opt for silver or platinum wedding rings, often engraved. Ring is unusual tattoo on the finger exercise , which replaces the traditional ring. The upside of such forms is the inability to lose such an adornment. Its aesthetic qualities and each has to decide. Rings are not the only symbol of marriage. Orthodox after the marriage ceremony and shave his head after the wedding to wear the head wrap. A more progressive, assume Wigs. In Greece, the wear rings, but only a man can afford the gold, the woman is, as a lower status and reports the man can only wear silver. In the cultures of African and indigenous American symbols of marriage may be a variety of other decorations, including the permanent body art such as tattoos or piercings. And the need to wear special costumes, or its components.